(From this Morning's Commercial.) FERRIMAN.—Fred. B. Ferriman, October 4, 10 P.

M. R. B., 7 P. M., Senday, October 5. The above appeared in the Commercial yeslerday morning. It announces simply a death; but the death was of a young man of twenty-six, who was the idel of a fair, slender girl of nineteen years. There is a sequel to this announcement, a tragedy of sudden insanity and swift suicide. The girl is dying as we write this, with a little bullet-bole in her left breast, to the right of the heart. It is a small black hole, made by a bullet from a small revolver but little more than a toy; but it is enough. There was hardly one chance in ten of a wound from this kind of a weapon resulting fatally, but unfortunately in this case the ball was well directed. The victim of the tragedy following the death is Miss Lulu George, a petite, pretty-blonde, and a bright, talented, and cultured g.rl, from Bonaparte, Iowa. She had come in yer ears wholle ye rade it?" here to study vocal music at the College of Music, and had been boarding some weeks with Mrs. Rogers, southeast corner of Fourth and Smith streets. It was there that she shot herself shortly before 12 o'clock, noon yesterday. Miss George was engaged meet, and she replied that she could never to Mr. Ferriman. They were to be married be more than assister to him. - Boston Post. in December. She was devoted to him with all the intensity of a sensitive organization, although contained in a small casket.

Mr. Ferriman was a travelling salesman for Voorhees, Miller & Co., Third street. He had been ill at the St. James, and since Tuesday Miss George bad frequently called on him. He had an intermittent fever, foilowed by congestive chills, with congestion of the brain threatened. His condition was dangerous. The girl did not know this, for Dr. Norton had, in the humanity of his nad ture, led her to believe that he would soon be well.

On Saturday night word came to Miss George, at her boarding-house, that Ferriman was dying. The girl flew to her lover to find him breathing his last. Those who witnessed it state that her paroxysm of and guish was terrible to behold. There is no doubt now that in that awful moment her mind yielded to the strain; insanity took the place of reason.

Mrs. Rogers, who had a deep feeling for the girl in her trouble, upon learning what had occurred, followed her to the St. James, and found her there in her misery, with dry eyes and wandering expression. Assisted by some gentlemen, she took her home that night. It was evident that the despair of her grief had driven her wild. She had not been back long before she commenced to insist upon returning to the body of her lover. Mrs. Rogers tenged to oppose her. wandering mind grasped at this idea quick-ly. She said: "Yes, in my nicest; I'll wear my plum-colored and velvet that be liked most." So a careful toilet was made, Mrs. Rogers assisting and delaying it as long as possible.

Then Miss George became weary, and said, "Now let's go." Mrs. Rogers called her attention to the fact that she had on dinners, and that she ought to put on her walking-shoes. She assented, and then Mrs. Rogers discovered that she had a rent in one of her stockings, and that she must put on clean hose. She again assented. By this time Dr. Carr came, and he decided immetime Dr. Carr came, and be decided immetime. diately that in her frame of mind she must not leave the house on the errand contemplated. She must be placed under the influence of an opiate. The ladies had often gone to the drugstore across the street for soda-water, and this suggested the idea of taking her over and drugging her soda. But they could not induce her to go, and the next best thing-for she was becoming wild-was to confine her to the bed and administer a hyperdermic injection of morphine. This was accomplished, and the idea of leaving the house was abandoned.

Although no peaceful condition of slum-ber followed, she was kept in the house till the morning under careful watch of Mrs. Rogers and her daughter and Mr. Burbridge, her cousin. During the night Miss George asked Mrs. Rogers to show her the location of the heart. Mrs. Rogers did so as nearly as possible, asking her if she had much pain there. She answered, "Yes, great pain-great pain !" Shortly after 6 o'clock Mrs. Rogers sent a servant to her with a nice light breakfast. She would not touch it, however, although begged to eat. She said, "Why should I eat? We eat to 1 ive. What have I to live for now?" This was the logic of her dazed brain.

Shortly after this, on being left alone St. James men started in various directions in quest of her. Some went to the river, others to the railroads, and others to the po-lice stations. Very soon she was found others to the rantous, of the rantous of the first in bed in Mrs. Rogers's room, on the first in bed in attendance. Shortly before noon she asked for the privacy of the room for a moment. This was readily granted. Very soon after this the report of a pistol was heard, followed by a shriek. Mrs. Rogers thought the pistel had been fired on Smith street, and that Miss George shricked with alarm. She and Mrs. Culbertson hurried to the chamber to tell Miss George not to be alarmed, and to their hor-ror discovered a black hole in her garment at the left breast, and detected the odor of powder. Mrs. Culbertson asked, "Have you shot yourself ?"

Miss George then raised her right hand, showing the pistol, and replied, "Yes, I've shot myself, and I'll shoot you." On questioning her, when it could be done, it was found that she had purchased the little pistol for a dollar on Fifth street, during her morning wanderings. She could not locate the place exactly. She had obtained with it a half-dozen cartridges, twenty-two calibre. She had placed only one cartridge in the revolver, but had managed to explode this one as nearly over her heart as possible without being exact. It was found that it would not be possible to probe the wound and that death must certainly result Mr. Ferriman's brother, Charles Ferri man, was in attendance at the St. James during his illness, and last night took the body to Albion, where their mother lives. Miss George's mother (her father is dead, we believe) lives with her brother, Dr. George in Bonaparte, Van Buren county, Iowa. Mrs. George is a cousin to Hiram Powers, the sculptor. Miss George has an uncle here, Mr. Frank Powers. She is a portrait-painter of considerable ability, as is shown by a nortraited by the decrease and the second statements. by a portrait of her brother, the doctor from her brush, that she has with her. It is stated that at the death-bed at the St. James Miss George, in her wild grief, cried out, "We'll not be parted long." At noon to-day Dr. Carr prenounces the ease hopeless, death being only a question of time. There is internal bleeding and no

Miss George reproaches herself that death was not instantaneous, and feels that she is a burden to Mrs. Rogers, who is doing everything to alleviate the pains of the dying girl as much as possible.

Dr. Carr called on Miss George later, and said he thought she would live until morn-

"The Old Yorklown Bell," Editors of the Disputch: In response to the query of "G. A. B." in your issue of this morning, referred to me, I can only say that I have no knowledge of "the old Yorktown bell" or any similar relic ever having been presented to the Commonwealth of Virginia, the Virginia Historical Society, or, indeed, to any public depository. I would be thankful to be further informed regarding the bell in ques tion-definitely where it erst pealed its alarum or out-toned its call-indeed, all or anything that can be furnished towards its identity, and fate. If from the vicinity stated, a credible presumption is that it was a church-bell. The old bell of William and Mary College, and that of St. Peter's church, in New Kent (where Washington was married), are believed to have been disposed of at about the period of the conclusion of our late war, or a little earlier. R. A. Brock. Richmond, October 15, 1879.

Ebenezer Stone and his wife, Flora, out in Illinois, were divorced not long ago, but afterward they came to an understanding, were remarried, and are now happy together as far as we know. It was a case of Eb and Flo, it would seem; at any rate, they are tide now. A critic, in noticing a discourse on "The Sayings and Doings of Great Men," remarks: "It is sad to observe how much they said and bow little they did."

"I have a love-letter," said the servantgirl to her mistress. "Will ye rade it to me? And here is some cotton wud ye stuff The ordinary life of a locomotive is thirty insist upon returning to the body of her lover. Mrs. Rogers feared to oppose her, and took the opposite tack of appearing to encourage her, while really delaying her until their physician, Dr. Carr, could come.
